A tomb just on the outskirts of the Giza site dates from the reign of the First Dynasty Pharaoh Wadj (Djet), and jar sealing discovered in a tomb in the southern Part of Giza mention the Second Dynasty Pharaoh Nineteen. But it was the Fourth Dynasty Pharaoh Khufu (Cheops) who placed Giza forever at the heart of funerary devotion, a city of the dead that dwarfed the cities of the living nearby. On its southwest diagonal is the pyramid of his son Khephren (Khephren, Khafre). Although it is smaller, a steeper angle results in the illusion that they are the same size. The Byzantine and later Islamic traditions continued to affirm this identification, leading to the establishment of Saint Catherine's Monastery in the 6th century CE during the reign of Emperor Justinian I. Geographically, Jabal Musa is one of the highest peaks in the south-central Sinai Peninsula, fitting the Biblical description of a mountain set apart where the Israelites could camp at its base.

Church : Atop Mount Sinai (Jabal Musa) stands the Chapel of the Holy Trinity, a small Greek Orthodox church marking the traditional site where Moses is believed to have received the Ten Commandments.
